

THE DAY THE ALIENS STOLE MY SOCKS

BY VYOM BLAGSVEDT

Dedicated to my parents who have been wonderful part of my life for all of the 12 years that I have lived.

One busy morning—clatter and clump!
Socks on the floor in a mismatched lump.
From under the bed came a whiff and a blur,
Three fuzzy creatures began to stir.

Out popped Blop, then Blip, then Blorp,
All in a wobble, a wiggle, a whorp!
Their feelers fizzed with a golden glow,
Buzzing and bumping wherever they go.

They didn't walk—no, not at all.
They scooted and skidded and bumped the wall.
Blorp spun round in fuzzy light.

Blorp's feelers flickered, soft and bright—
Like secrets passed in the dead of night,
Blop danced around the room,
Charles was laughing from the gloom.

They dove to the drawer
with a wobble and flop,
Out slid a sock with a gentle 'plop!'

They gathered socks in a glowing pile
Striped, spotted long and vile.
Striped and spotty and long and deep.
Their fuzzy feelers flared with glee
This was the fuel for their journey to be

They boarded their ship
in the dead of night.
But Charles sock-free?
That was not right.

Next morning Charles awoke to a glorious scene,
four pairs of socks radiant and clean.

Charles thought to himself,

‘How could this be?’

Were those aliens real or just a magical dream?

The End.

*When socks begin to disappear
and soft lights glow under the bed,
Charles discovers that unexpected visitors can arrive when you least expect them.*

*A warm, whimsical story about curiosity and kindness,
and what might happen when you lend a little help
even if you're not sure it was all a dream.
As well as for anyone who has ever lost a sock.*
